

Two New Restaurants Get a Taste of Henkel's Quality and Service

At B-Bop's, you roll down the car window and enjoy the carefree music of an era gone by as your dinner is ordered and prepared. At Culver's, you enjoy such treats as fresh frozen custard and Butter Burgers™ in a charming sit down ambience. These new Mason City restaurants have two things in common; good food at a good price, and facilities built by Henkel Construction.

Located at the busy intersection of Highway 122 and South Monroe, Culver's features 1,650 square feet of dining space with booths, tables and an outdoor patio. Quarry tile and carpet floors add class to this structure, which also features a drive-through window. Accörd Architecture, a subsidiary of Henkel, was the architect.

B-Bop's is a smaller structure because there is no inside seating. This 1950's-style restaurant is straight out of 'Happy Days' with drive-through or walk-up ordering. An attractive patio area with tables and bright neon signs complement the restaurant. This 1,000 square foot building was the first business to open in the new Indianhead Park on Mason City's west side. Simonson and Associates of Clive, Iowa, was the architect.
